About the FDP

Law teachers are the trainers of future judges, lawyers, and legal academia. With the rapid change in functioning of these institutions due to change in the pattern of economic development, the law teachers have great responsibility to effectively mentor the budding lawyers. The law student, pursuing a professional courses today, will have to cope-up with tomorrow's challenges in terms market driven economic growth, scarcity of resources, globalised trade & business, and at the same time they would require serve the cause of justice.

The pandemic Covid-19 has taught us about the limits of class learning. In future, the students should be allowed to learn more through field work and evaluated accordingly. Online learning is going to be the base through which the students, across the courses will be trained. Ministry of Human Resources, Government of India, and the University Grant Commission both are focussing on different techniques of Online Learning. Thus, the contact lectures through virtual classes will soon going to be the reality. In such a scenario, the clinical legal education can contribute immensely in not only application-based learning but also intense filed research.

The clinical legal education is not a term of art. The clinical legal education implies greater idea in which institutions should provide a learning environment wherein learner's skill could be honed effectively to identify the [legal] issues and resolve them through application of [legal] knowledge in diversified areas of law. The present FDP is designed to familiarise the law teachers towards teaching and research in the field of clinical legal education.
